What is Clinical Supervision?

It is process of professional support and learning that enables individual practitioners to develop knowledge and competence, assume responsibility for their own practice, and enhance patient protection and safety of care in a wide range of situations. The social work profession is beginning to recognize clinical supervision as an important part of clinical governance and a means of maintaining and improving standards of client care. This is especially true in the clinical social work and addictions field where Clinical supervision slowly becoming a statutory requirement as it is determinant of one's scope of practice.
